MOSAIC BOSTON: JAMAICA PLAIN (JAMAICA PLAIN)

About the Family

Ivey and Allie Rhodes have church planting in their blood. Ivey's grandfather helped plant a church in the '80s, and his father planted Oceanside Church in Charleston, S.C., in 2003. Ivey met his beautiful wife, Allie, while working at the Chick-fil-A where they had core team meetings, and Allie was saved through that church plant.

He graduated from Charleston Southern University in 2007 with a major in religion and a double minor in Christian leadership and art. He went on to get his MDiv in North American church planting from Southeastern Theological Seminary. Ivey and Allie have one beautiful daughter and three tough little guys. (Yes, that's four kids.)

Ivey and Allie believe they are uniquely designed for Jamaica Plain because of their proven ability to persevere, their church planting background, their creative abilities and their love for young and special needs families.

About the Church Plant

Jamaica Plain (JP) is one of Boston's most diverse neighborhoods and values community more than anything. It's packed with shared gardens, public parks and a market co-op. While JP desires community, displacement and gentrification have left many alienated and hurt. Many in JP believe political activism will solve these issues, but we know that the gospel is the true answer for a unified community. Throughout redemptive history and in the Scriptures, God has been gathering a community of people: His church.

We truly believe that Jamaica Plain is ripe for the true community found in Christ and His church. We desire to plant a church that wins the lost and reflects the diversity of the neighborhood and the true love found in Christ.
