

Noah Stepro

KAIROS COMMUNITY (ANTELOPE VALLEY)

About the Family

Noah and Jaimie Stepro are natives of Los Angeles, growing up in the Antelope Valley. They served in a variety of ministry contexts before being called to plant a church together. Their three daughters, Clover (6), Paisley (4) and Ember (2), are going to get a brother in 2015 (Soren).

As a family of musicians and artists, the Stepros enjoy spending time creating, playing, adventuring and laughing together. Jaimie whiles the days leading worship, discipling leaders, teaching her children and, as a compassion entrepreneur, raising awareness through her work at Trades of Hope.

In addition to serving as the lead pastor/planter at Kairos, Noah also enjoys teaching American history at the local college, serving on the board of Cherished (an anti sex-trafficking organization), blogging infrequently and cooking.

About the Church Plant

After graduating from Fuller Seminary and serving in several unique ministry contexts, I (Noah) felt a burden for reaching my generation through adventurous and creative means. The experience of church as a Sunday-centered, hour-a-week event has left so many people in our area spiritually bankrupt and relationally isolated. Our desire in creating Kairos is to cultivate a community centered on transformation by Jesus that is integrated through our entire lives—together.

We are "joining God in the renewal of all things" (Rev. 21) through a network of neighborhood churches. Our vision is for a movement that will affect and change our entire valley through local, incarnational congregations who live life, experience faith and serve together.
