NEXTGEN CHURCH (METRO VANCOUVER)

About the Family

Born in Korea, both Sam and his wife, Annie, moved to Vancouver during high school. Growing up in an immigrant family in Vancouver, Sam struggled with an identity crisis. Embracing multiple languages and cultures was a formidable task. After graduating from college, Sam served a multiethnic church called The Point. While serving at The Point, Sam saw the need to plant churches (20/20 Vision) for the 1.5 and second generation Korean-Canadians. The Lord called Sam and Annie to lead a church plant in Metro Vancouver to help the next generations find their true identity in Jesus (NextGen Church).

Growing up, Paul lived in Korea, Scotland, Canada, and different parts of the United States. So, Paul understands and knows what it means to live in a mixed culture. When Sam asked Paul to join the church plant for 1.5 and second generations in Canada, Paul definitely saw the need for it. Sam, Annie and Paul are dreaming of building God's kingdom by building the foundation for next generations.

About the Church Plant

Metro Vancouver is one of the most diverse and unreached cities in the world. More than 96.71 percent of its 3.5 million residents are lost. The need is great! One-third of the population is foreign born and one-third is second generation Canadian, so the opportunities are numerous, and many will return to reach their home countries.

NextGen Church hopes to be a place for these bridge generations. Our vision is to build a foundation for them by helping them to find their true identity in Christ and to live out that true identity in the world. Our prayer is that the next generations are renewed in Christ and empowered to help plant multiple congregations across the city as part of The Point Family 2020 Vision.
